BIRTHSTONES

January - GARNET

Once available primarily as dark, reddish brown stones, the gem marketplace now offers beautiful garnets in every color, except blue. From bright green drusy Uvarovite, to neon orange mandarin Spessartites, to pure spectral green Tsavorite and raspberry pink rhodolites, garnets are available in a wide price range and many cutting styles.

February - AMETHYST

Long a favorite, purple quartz, or amethyst, is available in sizes from small to huge, and in colors from pale lilac "Rose d' France" to strongly saturated "Siberian" purple with glints of red and/or blue. As well as faceted stones, it is possible to find lovely amethyst cabochons, carvings and beads.

March - AQUAMARINE

Named for its resemblance to the color of sea water, beryl in hues of blue-green to blue in medium dark to pale tones is called aquamarine. It can be found in a variety of cutting styles and makes a brilliant and durable jewelry stone (hardness = 7.5).

April - DIAMOND

With hardness of 10 and the brightest luster of all transparent gemstones, diamonds have a unique place in the gem marketplace. Diamonds occur in colorless and near colorless forms as well as rare fancy colors. Both color enhanced and synthetic diamonds are available as well as many diamond simulants, chief among them being cubic zirconia.

May - EMERALD

Beryl with medium to medium dark green color, contributed by chromium or vanadium content, is called emerald. Although frequently visibly included, traditional oiling treatments enhance the clarity of most pieces.

June - PEARL

Pearls are one of the few gemstones of organic rather than mineral origin, and also one of the few identified almost exclusively with one sex (female). Today's pearls ("cultured") are joint products of mollusc and human cooperation and can be from fresh or salt water species.

July - RUBY

Red corundum is known as ruby (while all other colors of that mineral are called sapphire). Chromium is the coloring agent. Large fine rubies are the most expensive gems sold in today's marketplace bringing prices considerably above that for diamonds of the same size and quality.

August - PERIDOT

Peridot occurs in shades of limey to olive yellowish green that are unique in the gem world. Major sources include the USA (Arizona), Pakistan, Burma and China. It is a reasonably durable jewelry gem for most applications with a hardness of 6.5. There are no treatments commonly used to enhance peridot.

September - SAPPHIRE

Although commonly thought of as blue corundum, sapphire occurs in a wide color range, as well as in phenomenal form, as star sapphires. Currently sapphire is the world's most popular colored gemstone with the US leading in purchases.

October - OPAL

Opal is one of the world's most popular and variable gemstones. It ranges in form and color from the bright red and oranges of Mexican opal to precious white, crystal and black opals through matrix and boulder types and to the transparent crystal opals. Precious opal is distinguished by a phenomenon called "color play"

November - TOPAZ

Since the advent in the market place, in recent decades, of heated and irradiated blue topaz, many don't realize that, historically, the color associated with this gem was yellow. The major source of yellow topaz in world commerce is Brazil.

December - TURQUOISE

Turquoise is an opaque blue to blue green gem often with black or tan matrix. Although once associated in the US almost exclusively with Native American silver jewelry, there has been a recent surge in interest in this gem by modern designers working in gold.
